

Lecture 1: Principles of Computer Architecture

The CPU is defined as the central processing unit that executes instructions.

RAM refers to random access memory which stores volatile working data.

Cache memory is a high-speed volatile storage buffer close to the processor core.

Pipelining is an implementation technique where multiple instructions are overlapped in execution.